Dear Msgr. Dyer:

Enclosed, please find three documents related to the allegations presented to your attention by Mr. REDACTED against Fr. Fidencio S. Silva-Flores, M.Sp.S.

The First of the documents is the "Report on the Interview with Fr. Fidencio Simon Silva-Flores on an allegation of Sexual Misconduct" dated April 7, 1995. This report comes directly from my personal notes taken during the interview in which you, Fr. Fidencio and myself were present. I wish you could review them to see if you would like to suggest any changes.

Dear Cardinal Mahony and REDACTED

I am writing this letter to bring information to your attention regarding repeated molestation of a number of youth by Father Fidenco Silva Flores when he served at Our Lady of Guadalupe Parish in Oxnard. I am unable to locate Father Flores and I bring this to your attention so you can turn over any information you have of him to law enforcement. Please advise me of Father Flores' whereabouts and what action, if any, is being taken to prevent him from abusing others.

Your prompt attention to this is appreciated.

8 Men Claim Former Oxnard Priest Sexually Abused Them as Children

Investigation: Police are pursuing allegations against a pastor now working in Mexico. Suits have been filed against him, his order and the L.A. Archdiocese.

By BETH SHUSTER and RICHARD WINTON
TIMES STAFF WRITERS

May 3 2002

Oxnard police are investigating allegations by eight men who say they were sexually abused as children at a church and on trips by a priest now working in Mexico.

The eight men, including two who are now police officers, sued Father Fidencio Silva, his order and the Archdiocese of Los Angeles on Thursday, alleging battery, negligent supervision and sexual abuse. Under California law intended to protect civil defendants in such cases, the four lawsuits did not name the priest or other defendants. However, the attorneys filing the lawsuits provided the names.

Oxnard Police Chief Art Lopez said his department has begun an investigation into the allegations of abuse by Silva. The lawsuits filed in Los Angeles Superior Court seek unspecified monetary damages. They allege Silva actively concealed the sexual exploitation of the boys and that church officials "knew or reasonably should have known" about the priest's conduct.

The suits accuse Silva, 45, of sexually abusing the boys from 1979 to about 1985 after becoming a pastor at Oxnard's Our Lady of Guadalupe parish. Some alleged abuses occurred during trips to Mexico, said Jeffrey R. Anderson, a St. Paul, Minn., attorney handling the case.

"This guy is a pedophile predator," Anderson said. "We have identified a total of 10 victims in a few years in Oxnard.... He is still out there and in position to ruin the lives of Mexican children. Our goal is prevention first, and maybe justice someday."

The men only recently confided the abuse to each other, they say. All are identified in the lawsuits as Juan Doe.

"He told me he was painting this Christ rising for Easter Sunday," said one of the men. "He was an artist and needed a model. He arranged for me to leave school and in the upper sacristy he asked me to disrobe.... I remember in my mind thinking, 'How does my body compare to the body of Christ?' I think I was a seventh-grader."

The man, now 35, alleges that Silva took photographs of him naked and then committed a sex act, saying he needed the photographs for a sex education class.

The man was allegedly molested from 1979 to 1983, the suit alleges.

Larry Drivon, a Stockton attorney also representing the eight men, said Silva was "sent to a dump ground for predator priests in Mexico."

Silva, also known as Silva Flores, could not be reached in Mexico for comment.

However, in a TV interview aired this week with Joel Grover, a CBS-2 reporter, Silva denied he sexually abused his accusers.

Silva is a member of Missionaries of the Holy Spirit, a small Mexico-based order that provides services to bilingual parishes.

Joe Deems, an attorney for the order, said a letter from Anderson a few weeks ago was the first notice the order had received about abuse allegations against Silva. He would not comment on the lawsuit.

Deems said an adult in 1995 complained of sexual misconduct allegedly committed by Silva the year before.

The archdiocese required the order to investigate the allegation. It determined Silva did not commit a crime, Deems said, but because of the "appearance of impropriety" he was removed from his assignment.

"He was removed from his pastoral assignment and relocated back to Mexico," Deems said. Silva took a leave of absence and underwent "some counseling" and then was assigned to a retreat in San Luis Potosi, Mexico. He is permitted to say Mass and hear confessionals, Deems said.

Meanwhile, in Los Angeles on Thursday, a 37-year-old former altar boy at Boyle Heights Church said he has reported to police that he was molested by a priest who was known for his work with Eastside gang members.

Lorenzo Najera alleged that the Rev. John Santillan molested him during the late 1970s, when Najera was age 12 through 17, at Santa Teresita Church.

He alleged the priest abused him in an upstairs bedroom of the church, during retreats in San Bernardino County and on a trip to Europe. He sued the priest in 1998 but the civil case was dismissed.

Santillan has been assigned to a parish in Bolivia since 1998.

"What proof does he have?" said Santillan when reached by La Opinion newspaper in the town of Cochabamba in Bolivia.

Oxnard men hope they'll help victims

Class-action suit might allow closure for abused, they say

By Tom Kisken, kisken@insidevc.com
July 18, 2002

Manuel Vega stepped in front of the camera and reporters at a press conference aimed at helping clergy-abuse victims come forward and clearly gave his name.

Dealing with pain and stigmas that cause many people to keep their accusations bottled inside, the Oxnard police officer and one-time altar boy said he's willing to be identified as a victim accusing a Catholic priest, who was also his godfather, of molesting him more than 20 years ago.

"There was an empowerment he had. He had an absolute power," Vega said on Wednesday, noting that going public is his way of regaining that power.

"I've seen people be victimized and sit there and cry and do nothing about it," he said.

Vega and Tranquilino Gomez, an auto mechanic from Oxnard, are the lead plaintiffs in a class-action lawsuit that a lawyer said is intended to represent all child-molestation victims in the Archdiocese of the Los Angeles. It was filed Tuesday. The two men allege they and other altar boys were molested by the Rev. Fidencio Silva when he was an associate pastor at Our Lady of Guadalupe Church in Oxnard in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

Silva denied the allegations in a television interview earlier this year in Mexico, where he was a priest with the Missionaries of the Holy Spirit religious order.

Vega said he looks at the priest, who was a close family friend, with emptiness. "There's no words to describe it," he said.

Vega is a decorated former Marine who won a community service award for his work with at-risk teens and was named the Oxnard Police Department's officer of the year for 2000.

He said the molestation, which included modeling nude for the priest's artwork, fondling and other sex acts, took place when he was 12 to 14 years old.

Gomez said he was molested by the priest at about the age of 13. He didn't tell anyone about the incident until he spoke to Vega several months ago.

Both men are still Catholics, though Vega said he has difficulty listening to a priest give a homily and at first felt as if he had lost his religion.

But "I'm not going to let him take that," he said of Silva.

As Vega and Gomez stood at the podium, three other men who allege that Silva abused them sat in the back. Two of them are Ventura County residents who asked for anonymity.

They talked about growing up in a Latino culture where Catholic priests are viewed as irrefutable authorities. They talked about the difficulty of telling parents about molestation. They said telling their stories means to relive them.

Lawyer Raymond Boucher said the class-action lawsuit is designed to give people a choice of maintaining some anonymity but still taking action.

Both of the lead plaintiffs were part of a group of eight former altar boys who sued Silva in May for alleged molestation in a case that has been folded into the class-action litigation. Boucher said lawyers involved in the case have learned of at least four others who make similar claims against Silva.

He said the lawyers have contact with more than 60 people who claim to have been molested by a priest or someone else connected with the church in the Archdiocese of Los Angeles, noting that the lawsuit is intended to represent them.

Gomez said he wants the church to stop covering up for the people whom Vega referred to as "the rot."

"If one of us had done it," he said of alleged molestations, "we would have been thrown in prison."

Tod Tamberg, spokesman for the Archdiocese of Los Angeles, referred to zero-tolerance policies, a reconstituted advisory board for dealing with clergy abuse and other measures as proof the church is reforming.

Noting he had no information about Silva's whereabouts in Mexico because the priest is under the jurisdiction of the order and not the archdiocese, Tamberg said the class-action suit could bring more healing.

"It's important to find an expedited way to resolve these cases for victims, their families and the church because we need to move forward to a brighter future," he said.

Vega said. "Now, we are one step

For nearly 20 years, Vega pushed memories of the abuse into his subconscious, he said. In fact, he met with the priest in 1991 to ask whether he would consider performing a marriage ceremony for him and his fianstrangely anxious in the meeting and backed away from the idea.

It wasn't until he left the Ma-

Privately grappling with his experiences, Vega tracked down

Molestation Charges

OXNARD - The Ventura County District Attorney's Office on Thursday charged a former priest at the Our Lady of Guadalupe Church in Oxnard with 25 counts of child molestation of eight youths occurring in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

The office filed a felony criminal complaint against the Rev. Fidencio Silva, 53, charging him with molesting the youths while he presided over the altar boy program at the Oxnard church.

"Silva had access to large numbers of boys as the head of the altar boy program and various youth ministries," said Ventura Deputy District Attorney Patrice Koenig. "Up until now our focus has been the victims, but the next issue will be locating him and evaluating his assignment and transfer history."

Authorities are seeking an arrest warrant.

Archdiocese spokesman Tod Tamberg did not return calls for comment.

The district attorney's action brings to a dozen the number of Catholic priests who have been criminally accused of molesting parishioners in Southern California.

According to church documents obtained by the Daily Journal, Silva was ordained in 1978. He was the director of the Key of Life Youth Group from 1979 to 1982, and director of the Spanish Youth Group from 1980 to 1986 at Our Lady of Guadalupe.

In 1986, church records show that he left the Los Angeles archdiocese.

He returned in 1989, according to the church documents, when he was in residence at the Missionaries of the Holy Spirit in Playa del Rey.

Between 1991 and 1993, Silva ministered to young adults, according to the documents.

Silva left the archdiocese in 1995 and moved to Mexico, where authorities believe he now resides.

VENTURA Warrant issued for ex-priest

A former Oxnard priest accused of molesting eight former altar boys in the 1970s and '80s has been charged with 25 counts of child molestation, officials said Thursday.

Prosecutors have obtained an arrest warrant for the Rev. Fidencio Simon Silva, 53, a former priest at Our Lady of Guadalupe Church whose last known location was in Jesus Maria, San Luis Potosi, Mexico.

The District Attorney's Office opened its investigation in April 2002 after one of the alleged victims came forward.

The alleged victims, who were between 11 and 15 years old at the time of the reported crimes, have moved on with their lives, said prosecutor Patrice Koenig, "but the psychological scars affected them greatly, especially because he was a priest."

FREED: Retired priest Michael Wempe, center, walks out of County Jail in Los Angeles after a judge ordered his release on his own recognizance. He had been held on $2-million bail on charges of molesting five boys 20 years ago.

Cell Doors Swing Open After Ruling on Molestation Cases

It was 2:26 a.m., and Lawrence Lovell was one of the first out. The 65-year defrocked priest awaiting trial on charges of molesting four altar boys at the historic San Gabriel Mission left Los Angeles County Jail after less than a week behind bars.

Twelve hours later, Michael Wempe left his jail cell with a smile on his face. The 63-year-old retired priest, whose bail had been set at $2 million, had been charged with molesting five boys 20 years ago.

Both men have denied the charges against them. At hearings next week, their cases are likely to be dismissed, prosecutors say.

And so it went. Friday, prosecutors, defense attorneys and the state attorney general's office scrambled to come to grips with the repercussions of a U.S. Supreme Court decision invalidating a California law that had allowed decades-old child molestation cases to be prosecuted.

Lovell and Wempe are among hundreds of people — some convicted, some confessed, some still awaiting trial — who will be released from jails and prisons across California if whose cases will be dropped as a result of Thursday's decision.

nia had violated the Constitution's ban on ex post facto — after the fact — laws when the Legislature decided to change the time limit for bringing criminal charges in child sex-abuse cases and made the new limit retroactive to cover long-ago cases.

For many prosecutors, victims' advocates and police, the court's decision was hard to take.

The affected cases all involve not just allegations of abuse, but strong corroborating evidence which was required under 1994 law that the high court struck down.

"These are cases where almost always the perpetrator admitted the abuse in either direct interviews with investigators or the victims played a role in gathering evidence, making ... phone calls or meeting with the person while they were wired," said Kevin Murphy, a sex crimes prosecutor in Alameda County.

Friday morning, Murphy dismissed the case against Stephen Kiesle, a former priest who had told investigators that he molested a number of children three decades ago.

Kiesle had served time in the late 1970s in a separate child molestation case.

In Santa Clara County, Assistant Dist. Atty. Chuck Willingham spent long hours after the ruling, calling victims to let them know the outcome. About 100 cases in his county will be affected.

"I'm sorry," he told nearly a dozen men and women with whom he had worked to build strong cases. "This is terrible, and there's really nothing we can do about it."

The response, Willingham said, has been "anger, disdain, confusion, a lacking of understanding as to how this could have possibly happened, resignation to outrage. These are not easy conversations to be a part of."

Willingham mentioned one case involving a husband and wife convicted on multiple counts of molesting children. A sentencing hearing had been scheduled for them for next week and they faced life in prison. Instead, they will be released.

"The reality is, they won the child sexual predator lottery yesterday," Willingham said. "They won the jackpot." He also noted that, with their convictions overturned, those getting out of jail will not be required to register as sex offenders.

"You're scot-free," he said. "Thank you very much."

But Kay Duffy, attorney for Father Robert Sutphin, 71, who is charged with 14 counts of molestation, disputed that evaluation. Her client may no longer face prison as a result of the court ruling, but his life has been turned upside down by being publicly labeled a child molester, she said.

"I don't think anybody is walking away from this thinking they got away with something," Duffy said.

"These people have been tried and convicted in the press already and they still have to live with that stigma for the rest of their lives."

Sutphin's lawyers have agreed to wait until after his alleged victims are contacted before seeking dismissal of the charges against him.

Ventura County Chief Deputy Dist. Atty. Michael Frawley, who has been part of the prosecution effort against Sutphin, sighed as he talked about the slow and painstaking process now facing prosecutors.

"Here's our problem," Frawley said. "Not only is there a lot to do, but there is a great deal of disappointment walking the halls here. A lot of people put in a lot of effort to make those cases happen."

His prosecutors have not yet dismissed any cases but they have identified at least 20 that are likely to be overturned as a result of the decision.

The case against Father Robert Sutphin, 71, is one example.

Silva, a Catholic priest who from 1973 until 1986 ran the altar boy program at a church in Oxnard, was charged with 25 counts of child molestation in March, after a yearlong investigation.

Frawley, a supervisor on the case, said 12 to 14 alleged victims had been interviewed.

The process was emotional and time-consuming and, now, for naught.

California Atty. Gen. Bill Lockyer sent a letter Friday to all district attorneys across the state, advising them to act quickly to comply with the court's decision. "Immediate motions for dismissal in the interest of justice would be appropriate," the letter said.

But Lockyer's office is taking the position that crimes that occurred between Jan. 1, 1988, and Jan. 1, 1994, are still prosecutable, according to Robert Anderson, chief assistant attorney general. That's because the statute of limitations for some sex crimes against children had been six years. For others, it had been three years.

Crimes that occurred after 1994 were not affected by the Supreme Court's decision.

Los Angeles Dist. Atty. Steve Cooley has estimated that at least 200 cases in the county may be affected by the ruling. But determining which cases are still viable is a slow process, officials said.

In San Mateo County, Deputy Dist. Atty. Rick Good said having to call the victims was even more upsetting than the news of the ruling.

On Thursday, Good phoned a woman who had been sexually abused in the 1970s, when she was 13 years old, by Ramiro Jack Long, a Redwood City karate teacher. Good told her that Long, convicted by a jury and expected to serve at least 16 years, would instead be released.

"She was devastated," Good said.

The victim, now in her 40s, told Good she feared that Long might now come after her. She wanted to know when he would be released, saying that she planned to move.

Many alleged victims risked a lot by coming forward to testify, said San Bernardino County District Atty. Michael Ramos.

"That's the saddest part of this whole decision, but we will do our best to understand what this fully means and then gently give the news that these people will no longer be held responsible," Ramos said.

"We're calling them and we're trying to keep their spirits up, but we're being very blunt with them. It doesn't appear that they're going to be able to achieve closure with law enforcement and justice. It's been taken away," said Elliot Beckerman, assistant district attorney in San Francisco.

Frawley said his Ventura County prosecutors will continue to reassure people who went to police with allegations of abuse that their efforts made a difference.

"We'll tell them that they definitely did the right thing in coming forward," he said.

"It exposed a huge problem out there, and it served to educate the public about what a dirty secret this is."

Priest Charged in Sex Abuse of Boys in Oxnard

Prosecutors are trying to find Father Eudencio Silva in connection with 25 counts of child molestation. He was last known to be stationed in Mexico.

A Catholic priest who used to be in charge of the altar-boy program at an Oxnard church was charged Thursday with 25 counts of child molestation by the Ventura County district attorney's office.

After an investigation that took nearly a year, prosecutors are seeking an arrest warrant for Father Eudencio Silva, 53, who served at Our Lady of Guadalupe church from 1978 to 1988. They will start extradition proceedings when they locate Silva, who as recently as 2002 was serving at a church in Mexico.

The criminal charges follow a lawsuit filed by eight men, including two corporate executives, an attorney and two police officers. They were altar boys, 11 to 15 years old at the time, who helped Silva at services, according to a spokesman for the district attorney's office.

The criminal charges came as the clock was ticking on a state-imposed one-year limit between police learning of possible molestations and prosecutors filing charges. They also came with Easter just around the corner — a season of renewal, especially meaningful this year for Manuel Vega, 36, an Oxnard police officer who is one of Silva's accusers.

"What this does, not only for myself but other victims of Father Silva, is validate us as victims," said Vega, who this week urged a state Assembly committee to freeze the statute of limitations in child sex-abuse cases.

"For so many years, we all lived with these horrific incidents in silence and shame," Vega said. "Now, we are one step closer to getting to the truth."

For nearly 20 years, Vega pushed memories of the abuse into his subconscious, he said. In fact, he met with the priest in 1991 to ask whether he would consider performing a marriage ceremony for him and his fiancée. But Vega said he felt strangely anxious in the meeting and backed away from the idea.

It wasn't until he left the Marines the next year and entered the police academy that recollections of the alleged acts began to emerge.

Privately grappling with his experiences, Vega tracked down other former altar boys who also claimed to have been molested by Silva at the church, in the rectory and on outings. The group hired attorneys to file suit against Silva, his order and the Los Angeles Archdiocese.

They also urged local prosecutors to take up the case.

On Thursday, Chief Assistant Dist. Atty. Patricia Murphy said the felony complaint caps a painstaking investigation into suspected sex abuse by Silva and at least two other former Ventura County priests.

With the alleged crimes occurring so long ago, prosecutors have struggled to obtain evidence. They recently used a grand jury to subpoena witnesses and last month urged a judge to force the church to turn over documents. Joe Deems, an attorney for Silva's order, Missionaries of the Holy Spirit, could not be reached for comment. He told The Times last May that the order investigated Silva after a 1995 complaint and concluded he had not committed a crime.

Silva received counseling during a leave of absence before taking his post in San Luis Potosi, a mountainous state in central Mexico, Deems said.

In an interview last year with a television reporter, Silva said he asked boys to model for paintings but denied molestating them.

Times staff writers Tracy Wilson, Jennifer Ragland and William Lobbell contributed to this report.

Father Eudencio Silva denied allegations last year.

Molestation Charges

OXNARD - The Ventura County District Attorney's Office on Thursday charged a former priest at the Our Lady of Guadalupe Church in Oxnard with 25 counts of child molestation of eight youths occurring in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

The office filed a felony criminal complaint against the Rev. Fidencio Silva, 53, charging him with molesting the youths while he presided over the altar boy program at the Oxnard church.

"Silva had access to large numbers of boys as the head of the altar boy program and various youth ministries," said Ventura Deputy District Attorney Patrice Koenig. "Up until now our focus has been the victims, but the next issue will be locating him and evaluating his assignment and transfer history."

Authorities are seeking an arrest warrant.

Archdiocese spokesman Tod Tamberg did not return calls for comment.

The district attorney's action brings to a dozen the number of Catholic priests who have been criminally accused of molesting parishioners in Southern California.

According to church documents obtained by the Daily Journal, Silva was ordained in 1978. He was the director of the Key of Life Youth Group from 1979 to 1982, and director of the Spanish Youth Group from 1980 to 1986 at Our Lady of Guadalupe.

In 1986, church records show that he left the Los Angeles archdiocese.

He returned in 1989, according to the church documents, when he was in residence at the Missionaries of the Holy Spirit in Playa del Rey.

Between 1991 and 1993, Silva ministered to young adults, according to the documents.

Silva left the archdiocese in 1995 and moved to Mexico, where authorities believe he now resides.
